Parental Controls

It is important to set up appropriate parental controls on the devices your children use at home. ## Spring term safeguarding focus - Speak out. Stay safe.

This is a program, run by the NSPCC and is a safeguarding initiative for primary school children to learn about abuse and how to get help.

Key aspects of the program:

- Education about abuse: The program helps children understand what abuse is, including physical, emotional, and sexual abuse, and that it's never their fault.
- Safe adults: Children learn to identify trusted adults they can talk to, both at school and at home, including parents, teachers, and family members.
- Childline: The program emphasises Childline as a resource for children to get help and support when they are worried or need to talk about something.
- Open communication: Parents are encouraged to have open conversations with their children about safety, using the program's resources and messages as a starting point.
- Reinforcing key messages: Parents can reinforce the program's messages by engaging in activities and discussions at home to help children remember the importance of speaking out and staying safe.
